Read the following text then choose the right answer for each question.

If you are good enough, you are old enough.' Young executives come back from business schools armed with big ideas, however, these may or may not win support from colleagues. In order to be welcomed, young managers need to build credibility with the key stakeholders in order to show that you are up to the job. You should have confidence in your ability to do the job. Young managers should avoid favoritism and cliques. Leaders win respect by treating people the same. Keep a cool head even when you are under a lot of pressure. Some colleagues will expect you to crack. Do not give them the satisfaction. Show respect to older colleagues. They may be on a slower (or different) career path just because that is where they want to be. Draw on their experience and find the right balance between being enthusiastic and being overconfident. The last tip is that under-promise and over deliver. That motivating speech on your first day may sound pretty stupid if the market turns against you.

When thinking about how you start your business, getting the right team together will be the most important and the most difficult decision you make. The reason is simple. No one person has all the skills, experience, contacts or reputation that are required to get a business up and running. So, in order to succeed, you will have to form a core team of people. Before that, however, you can only know who else you need by knowing your strengths and your weaknesses. Having a great business idea does not mean that you have the skills to manage others. The hardest of all your decisions may be to let someone else lead the company you founded. What, then, does the team need? First, it needs the ability to sell - and in particular the ability to persuade others to buy into your vision. Second, the team needs the ability to count. The business is managed by managing the flow of cash. It may be the accountant's job to do your books, but it is your responsibility to understand them so well that you use them to drive the business. Third, the team needs experience. There are three types: customer experience, product experience and start-up experience. Fourth, the team needs to have contacts, relationships, a network. Having people who can help you informally or formally will help your business succeed. Finally, you and your team must be fully aware that starting a business means giving up two things - time and money. Succeeding with an innovation-based company takes everything: all of your time, all your great ideas, lots of personal sacrifices - and it may take all of your money. There is no magic formula to building a business. It is like putting together the pieces of puzzle.

7. If you want your new business to succeed, you yourself first need to gain all the necessary skills and experience.
8. Starting a business means putting a lot of time, effort and money.
9. It is the manager's job to do the business books.

Chanel No 5 has been the number-one fragrance in the world since its creation in 1921, an extraordinary achievement in an industry that sees an average of 300 perfumes launched every year. In some markets, however, Chanel No 5 slipped. In order to regain the top spot, and attract a new generation of perfume wearers, Chanel launched a new ad campaign which centers on a 'commercial', starring Nicole Kidman, and lasting almost three minutes. The short film is a fairy-tale romance. It tells the story of the most beautiful woman in the world who flees a horde of paparazzi and jumps into a taxi where she meets a young writer. He does not know who she is, and they share a romantic weekend before she returns to the outside world. Read the following text then choose the right answer for each question.

For traditional stores, online shopping has become a cause for concern in a difficult retail environment. The Internet is accounting for more spending than ever. In addition, it also makes it easier for consumers to compare prices across a far bigger selection of items than a trip to the high street. The way the Internet encourages people to shop about is having a big impact on the market. Internet retailers have been able to offer cut-throat prices because they do not have to bear the cost of running a physical shop. Retailers selling electrical goods have been particularly hit by the Internet, as items such as televisions and DVD players become more common purchases. This creates a dilemma for retailers who sell products both online and in shops. Some bricks-and-mortar retailers are adopting a model of dual pricing in order to keep their position online while maintaining margins in their shops. To be successful in operating in the online and offline world, retailers should probably try to integrate the two as much as possible. Some businesses, for example, have set up their operation to allow customers to shop online, over the telephone or in stores.

Philomena Tan was a successful, highly paid market research consultant who sometimes worked till 10 p.m. For a long while, she loved her job and there were perks - lots of travel, for instance - but it was never what she had planned to do with her life. Like so many others, she just got involved in a career that had started accidentally. Tan made steady progress up the corporate ladder. But the turning point came the year she spent the entire week of her husband's birthday in Brisbane running market research groups while he was home alone in Melbourne. It made her examine her life and think about what she was really contributing to society. Tan planned her escape carefully. She saved money and returned to study. A decade later, it has all come together, and she is happy. The research she did for a doctorate in psychology not only added to her qualifications as a psychologist and psychotherapist, but gave her the raw material for her first book, Leaving the Rat Race to Get a Life, a handbook for anyone seriously considering changing the pace of their lives. These days, Tan is in private practice in her local community, does yoga and chooses her own hours. She rarely works more than four days a week and, because she sees clients in the evening, she keeps her afternoons free to catch up with reading, meet with friends or research her next book. She is happy. 'When you are working up to 70 hours a week, you don't have time for this,' she says.
